When other Western powers failed in Mideast...

Michael Provence

The decision that failed in the new Arab states was the decision to resist the Soviet presence in the region. Instead of the United States and Europe providing economic, political, and military support to the new nations, they opted to support the PCI and the Ba'athist regimes. The result was a failure of Western policy in the region, as the Soviet Union filled the vacuum left by the West.